1. There are no organized radio manufacturing companies in Manchuria. Previously there were two plants in Manchuria which assembled radio sets. These were the Mukden Manchuria Radio Company, which assembled radios for the Japanese Army, and the Manchuria Telephone and Telegraph Company in Changchun, which had a small radio assembly factory.
2. As these assembly plants were looted by the Soviets, the only radio sets on the market in Manchuria are ones which have been repaired, stolen from the Japanese, or brought in by Japanese from other areas. In addition, a few Japanese radio technicians, who are forced to remain in Manchuria as technical advisers, are secretly assembling short wave sets from parts bought on the market from looters of the Kwantung Army. Note: Source does not state under whose auspices these Japanese technicians are working.)
